

Just Leave It Be!

WHAT YOU CAN DO...

Enjoy your find,
but leave it in place exactly as you found it.

Mark the artifact's
location on a map.

Report the information to the nearest Forest Service office.

- All artifacts found on public lands are protected by state and federal laws*. It is illegal and unethical to collect artifacts on public lands.
- Artifacts include anything made or used by humans including arrowheads and flakes, pottery, basketry, rock art, bottles, coins, metal pieces, and even old cans.
- Collecting artifacts disrupts the archaeological record. What is MOST significant about an artifact is its placement or the structure and composition of a site. Once an artifact is moved, that information is lost forever.
- You may sketch or photograph artifacts, but never dig in an archaeological site or collect artifacts from the ground surface.

If you find an artifact, leave it in place. Do not bring it to a Forest Service office, and do not take it home.
